RED PARK. MITINO

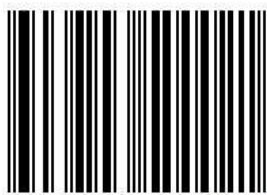

Mitino Park is characterised by its undulating terrain, which distinguishes it from other parks in Moscow. The design proposal brings out the panoramic potential of this quality and focuses on the site's rich historical layers.

Red was chosen as an identifying trademark of the park for its inherent connection to the city of Moscow, as well as its strong presence amid the seasonally changing landscape. A red leaf found on our initial site visit triggered the creation of a flexible system of architectural elements. Simple and delicate, the leaf became a universal form which is repeated in multiple configurations that together signify the park's identity. One leaf is a sheltered park bench. A light structure of two leaves frames points of entry. Three leaves form a small pavilion. Four leaves become an elegant greenhouse and cafe situated on the terrain's highest relief. The children's playground is sheltered under a five leaf structure. A roof of six leaves houses an equestrian arena. Twelve leaves form a cafe next to one of the ponds. A network of leaf modules work as shading for the multifunctional central square.
